

Applications and Challenges of Machine Learning Applied to the Chemical Recovery Cycle

Dr. Andrew K. Jones, International Paper

Abstract

This presentation will present examples of using machine learning techniques for predictions and root cause analysis of various unit operations in the chemical recovery cycle. Also addressed are the specific challenges of building these types of models with the data that is available for these processes. Examples of use include predicting chemical reduction efficiency, recovery boiler fouling rates and understanding the root causes of high fouling rates.